"The Girl in the Attic" by Sarah Jane Shaw weaves a tale of psychological torment and childhood trauma. When a young woman discovers a hidden attic in her new home, she stumbles upon a chilling secret that threatens to unravel her sanity. As she delves deeper into the attic's haunting history, she finds herself trapped in a claustrophobic web of fear and paranoia.

"The Drowned Man" by Michael Wehunt paints a desolate and eerie landscape. A group of fishermen ventures into the unforgiving sea, only to encounter a grotesque and terrifying creature lurking beneath the waves. As their sanity erodes and their lives hang in the balance, they must confront their deepest fears to survive the clutches of the unknown.

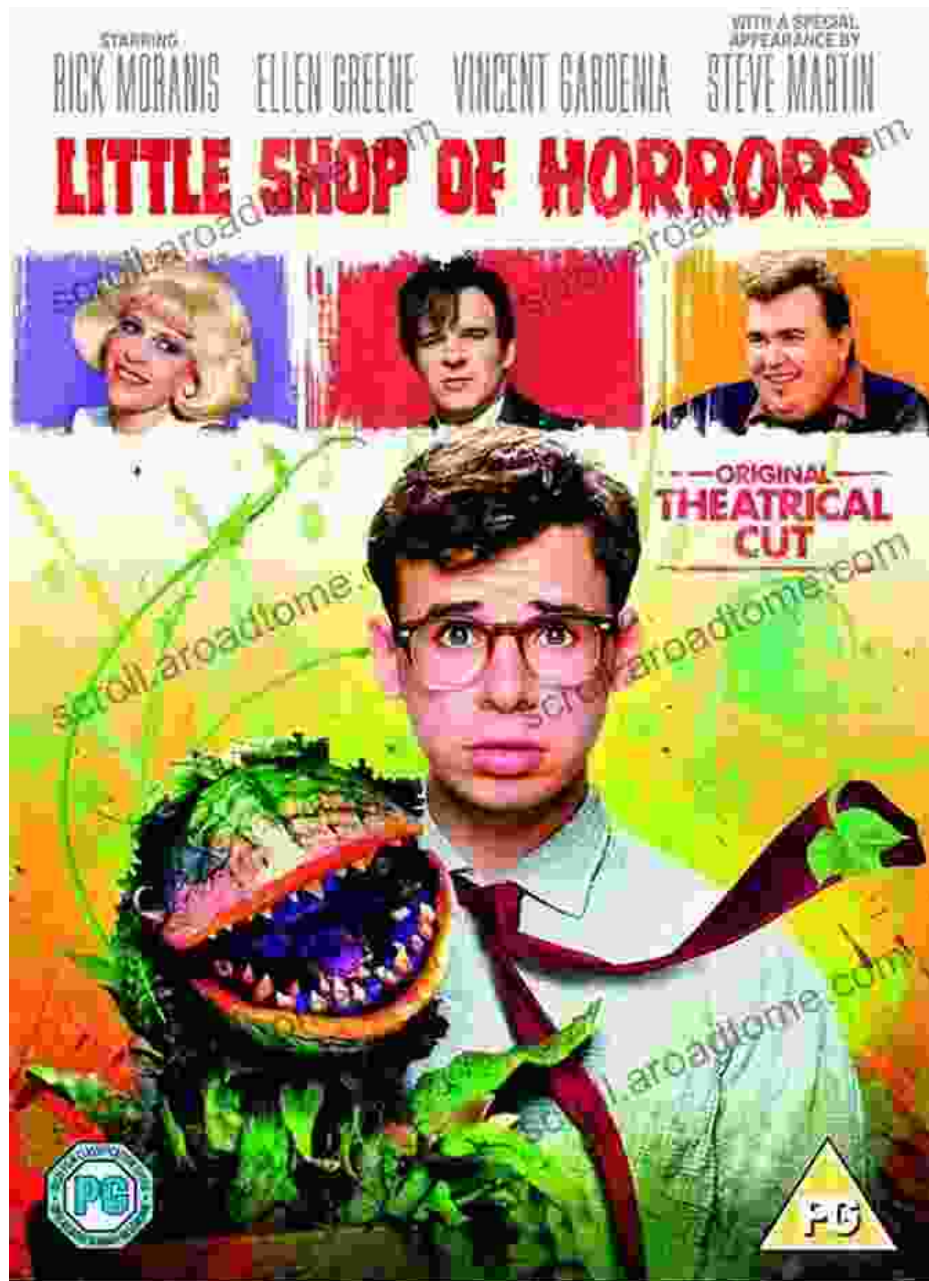

Issue 11: Embracing the Macabre and the Supernatural

Issue 11 invites you to embrace the macabre and explore the realms of the supernatural. Its haunting tales will ignite your imagination and leave you questioning the boundaries between reality and the unknown. Each story unfolds like a whispered secret, drawing you deeper into a world where shadows come to life and the ordinary becomes extraordinary.

"The Witch's House" by Gemma Files transports you to a secluded village where dark magic and ancient superstitions collide. A group of children stumble upon an abandoned house rumored to be haunted by a malevolent witch. As they venture inside, they awaken a dormant evil that threatens to consume them all.

"The Bone Orchard" by S.P. Miskowski takes you on a journey through a haunting and mysterious orchard. A young woman, haunted by a tragic past, finds herself drawn to the bone-filled orchard. As she walks among the twisted trees, she discovers that the orchard holds secrets that will forever change her life and the destiny of her loved ones.

Exquisite Artwork: A Visual Feast for the Senses

Beyond the captivating stories, Little Shoppe of Horrors Issue 10-11 showcases exquisite artwork that complements the chilling narratives perfectly. Each illustration is a masterpiece of darkness and beauty, capturing the essence of the stories and enhancing the macabre atmosphere. The artists bring the characters, creatures, and settings to life, creating a visual symphony that will haunt your imagination long after you finish reading.

Ben Templesmith's haunting illustrations for "The Girl in the Attic" perfectly convey the psychological torment and claustrophobic atmosphere of the story. His detailed and expressive artwork brings the attic's eerie secrets and the character's inner turmoil to life.

Paolo Rivera's artwork for "The Drowned Man" captures the desolate and terrifying beauty of the sea. His use of color and shadow creates a palpable sense of dread and isolation, immersing the reader in the fishermen's desperate struggle for survival.

Alan Quah's illustrations for "The Witch's House" evoke the sinister atmosphere of the haunted village. His shadowy figures and twisted imagery perfectly capture the malevolent nature of the witch and the terror that grips the children.

Evan Cagle's artwork for "The Bone Orchard" transports the reader to a haunting and otherworldly realm. His ethereal landscapes and haunting figures create a sense of mystery and beauty that lingers in the mind long after the story ends.
